

CANADA?

What happens after the War of 1812?

The War of 1812 (which lasted from 1812 to 1814) was a military conflict between the United States and Great Britain. As a colony of Great Britain, Canada was swept up in the War of 1812 and was invaded several times by the Americans. The war was fought in Upper Canada, Lower Canada, on the Great Lakes and the Atlantic, and in the United States. The peace Treaty of Ghent (1814), which ended the war, largely returned the status quo.

However, in Canada, the war contributed to a growing sense of national identity, including the idea that civilian soldiers were largely responsible for repelling the American invaders. In contrast, the First Nations allies of the British and Canadian cause suffered much because of the war; not only had they lost many warriors (including the great Tecumseh), they also lost any hope of halting American expansion in the West, and their contributions were quickly forgotten by their British and Canadian allies.

For Indigenous peoples living in British North America, the War of 1812 marked the end of an era of self-reliance and self-determination. Soon they would become outnumbered by European settlers in their own lands. Any social or political influence enjoyed before the war dissipated. Within a generation, the contributions of so many different peoples, working together with their British and Canadian allies against a common foe, would be all but forgotten.

So What Did the 'Map' of Canada look like after 1812?

We know that the Indigenous peoples were given land West of the Appalachian Mountains during the Royal Proclamation but after the War of 1812, land and the push to move West to claim more territory is going to ignore this. Any lands that the Indigenous groups were promised, are going to become British territory with this push towards Confederation.
